Unpopular Essays

BASSEY EKPO BASSEY

In fact, more than any other variable, it stands as a lasting indictment to the "mili-tary" regime of Gene-ral Yakubu Gowon.

The practice of drafting naked girls to swing in amuse-ment to the country's spoilt elite, of camping school pupils endlessly away from school in "culture camps", has lent credence to the definition of culture as what "the poor do to amuse the rich".

But culture in its true sense, is a lot more than that. Pro-fessor Abraham calls "the whole knowlit "the whole Knowledge, art, science, technology, religion,
morality, ritual, politics, sports, literature,
language, even etiquette and fashions... of a people".

In other words, culture is the way of life

In other words, culture is the way of life of a people. And Nigerian culture (if there is any such thing) can only be explained in terms of mass poverty, a non-existent technology and tribalism. logy and tribalism, not in "festivals of traditional dances."

Perhaps, nowhere is the abuse to which is the abuse to which culture has been put, better dramatised than in Nigeria's South-Eastern State. Work is nearing completion on a multi million naira cultural centre that will employ a director for N6,895 per annum!

Many people are being trained at Lon-don's Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts to enable ti. m contri-bute towards develop-ing NIGERIAN culture in the South-East. An. in the south-xious workers who cannot easily get a cannot easily bus ride to work, watch helplessly as virtually empty buses "SOUTH-" CULTURE' streak past in the mornings.

And in Lagos last year, at the opening ceremony of the first national sports festi-South-East caused a they ap-wrappers, contingent stir when peared in barefooted march-past.

So serious is the business of "culture" that in Oron (a town with little or no amenities), the local deve-lopment union has viving our "culture" dates back to the colo-nial era. Because colo-nial domination was as spiritual as it was material, there was a programmed action to make colonial subjects look down on things African. (Up till today a "made in England" tag in Nigeria is regarded as an au-tomatic guarantee for action aimed weilding our various peoples together, im-prove their standards of living and lead them to spectacular achieve-ments in the arts, sciences and technolocultural revolu-A cultural revolu-tion should give a new orientation to the Ni-gerian people by edu-cating them away from with the help of a council of chiefs, that membership in that council was elective. That when the people were thoroughly diswere thoroughly dis-satisfied with the Oba, they passed a parrot's egg to him, indicating that he should take his life.

Put in other words, Put in other words, power belonged to the people. An honest at tempt at cultural revival should endeavour to create a political system that will invest the people of this system that will invest the people of this country with power to take political deci-sions for themselves or through their elec-ted representatives in ted representatives in parliament.

Rather than hold Rather than hold traditional dance fes-tivals, cadres should be sent round the country to educate the people on their rights, what the political system expects from them, what demands they can legitimately make of the system, and how.

Once in a while, our leaders indulge in some glib talk of en-forcing "national" forcing "national" dresses and making a lingua franca out of one of the Nigerian languages. The argu-ment is that, for as long as we speak English and dress in suits we can never be respected in the international community.

national community.

To make too much fuss about the socialed national dress and developing a local Nigerian lingua franca is to miss the point ... entirely.

The fact that an American dress-s the same as an English man and speaks English does not deny him an international presence that is separate from the for the English man. It does not subtract, from the respect we accord him as member of a nation that has, through science and technology, immensely contributed to wirds making the world a better place to live in.

Similarly the Japanese

a better place to live in.

Similarly the Japanese culture impresses the world with electronics, not dressing, language or feed vals. The point is iherefore made, that Nigeria' culture will be better enthinced if all the rumoured N500,010 that was to be spent on the projected World Black and African Festival of the Arts and Culture is sunk into research into our trad'tional medicine (for example).

Afterall China's culture

Afterall, China's cultural revolution of the 1960's revived acupuncture, an ancient Chinese medical science. And today, the western world is going there to learn.

Culture Nonsense This

committed itself to building a Not cultural centre! ₩17,000 cultural centre!

The ousted governor of the state, Brigadier U. J. Esuene, encouraged by his state's performance at the national competition for Gowon's gold gong is reported to have donated a silver cup for "cultural competitions" in the state. (He did not say how you could make one cultural form compete with another).

Fittingly, his last

Fittingly, his last official tour of Kwara official tour of Kwara State was filled with "cultural" shows. Reflecting on his happy moments in Kwara, the ex-governor was reported to have told reporters, that "from all the things he had seen in that state, it was evident that the state would give the South-East a favourable competition dur-South-East a layour-able competition dur-ing the next festival of arts and traditional dances for the head of dances for the head of state's gold gong."

And in a glowing tribute to the gover-nor, his cultural com-missioner, Chief J. D. Esema held him up as "one of the few Nige-rious who are conrians who are con-vinced that the politivinced that the political philosophy of any nation is intricately tied up with its culture." "We are," he continued, "particular, ly lucky at this stage of our cultural development to have a leader of his calibre". der of his calibre"

True, to Esuene as well as other members of the Gowon brigade, culture was competi-tion. It was at once a pastime and an industry. The attempt at re-quality)

A professor of his-tory at Oxford University went ahead to ar-ticulate the mood ticulate uculate the mood of the colonialists towards their colonies when he said that Africans had no culture. That all civilisation started with the coming of the white man man.

This statement underscored the colonial aspiration to "civilise" their subjects by introducing them to the marvels of the west. They even went as far aspeciating the West. as replacing the various African religions with theirs.

There was at this time, a feeble African nationalists resistance to this tendency The nationalists did their damnest to prove that there was, in fact, an African civilization, seperate from their colonial experience. Because the colonial Because the colonial challenge was continental, the African response was correspondingly continental. Then, it was legitimate to talk about African culture.

Mate to talk about African culture.

But with the emergence of autonomous African states the need for culture revival ought to be localised lised

Sadly, apart from Tanzania and a few others, independent others, independent African states still in-dulge in the contradiction of trying to pro-mote "African cul-ture," rather than build their own natio-nal cultures. New situations require new responses.

To build a Nigerian national culture is to execute a programme the acquisitive pro-pensity that is fast ebbing the country.

One of the contra-dictions of the Gowon era was identifyable in the way perfor-mance never matched mance never matched promise. For its cultural goal, the regime committed itself to building "a just and egalitarian society".

An egalitarian society is not realisable where coses to edu where access to edu-cation is basically un-even. In the South-East, Esuene's government put up a show of taking over educaof taking over educa-tion as a means of equalising opportuni-ties for every child.

At the same time, the government tolerated private kindergar-ten schools which, by the very fees they charged, are exclusive to an infinitesimal sec-tion of the community. tion of the community.

It also permitted an Abak-based school to be turned into a nunery by a church organisation, when available schools cannot even cope with the teeming thousands

even cope with the teeming thousands who want to learn.

That private agen-cies should be capable of detracting from the cultural goals of the former military re-gime (se easily) is in-avaplicable in terms of explicable in terms of agencies' strength. It can only be understood in understood in terms of the inner degeneration into which the regime in ques-tion had fallen. Such a government does not have any right what-soever to talk about cultural revival.

The story is told that in the old Oyo empire the Oba ruled